THOUSANDS SEE PARADE

Raymond Milliken was the most beautiful baby in the Kensington baby parade of yesterday. He is two years old, and lives at 1822 East Schiller street.

In fully decorated floats and coaches the tiny folk slowly proceeded before thousands of admiring eyes along Front street and Kensington avenue, the two streets converging at Norris Square, Howard and Diamond streets. There the winners of the prize were announced. The judges were five trained nurses, members of the Visiting Nurse Society. They were the Misses M. Kauffman, C. Flynn, E. Griffith, M. Huff and M. Randall.

The winners of the prizes were: For the most beautiful baby, $30 in gold, Raymond Milliken, two years old, 1822 East Schiller street; for the best dressed baby, $25 in gold, Edna May White, four years old, 3307 North Front street; (Edna also won the beauty contest conducted in Ocean City two years ago); for the best impersonation, $25 in gold, Dolly Elliott, three years old, 2802 Lee street; and for the best twins, in health and beauty, $25 in gold, Leola and Doris Mathews, one year old, 2523 East Dauphin street.

'BENDS' MEAN SICK 'SAND-HOG,' NOT TOO STRENUOUS TIPPLER

Special Precautions Taken to Care for Men Who Work Under Heavy Air Pressure Beneath River

What are the "bends?" Every one is talking about them.

"Bends," as described by Charles Brodie, for twenty-two years a "sand-hog" with experience on every big bridge and tunneling job in the country, and rated as one of the foremost compressed-air workers in the business, are nothing more or less than cramps caused by the air not getting out from under the skin.

Brodie will have charge of the "muckers" in the sinking of the caisson on the Philadelphia side of the Delaware River Bridge.

"When a man is in a lock working under twenty-five or thirty pounds air-pressure," the veteran explained, "he finds that he is able to work with far more ease than on the surface. In fact, it is not until he comes to the surface that he really feels the extent of his exertion."

Must Be Testotators
"It is essential for all men who intend taking up compressed-air work to quit drinking liquor and take good care of themselves."

Often men who do not eat proper food are taken with the "bends" in the stomach when they come out of the locks, and it usually proves fatal if they are not placed in the emergency lock at once and the pressure raised.

Brodie said that four times he had been paralyzed from the waist down, but he never has missed a day's work. "When I was paralyzed it was necessary for me to be placed in my lock by two men," he explained. "When the pressure was put on my paralysis disappeared and I was able to work without difficulty. As soon, however, as I came to the surface the paralysis returned and lasted for several days."

To avoid fatalities, the Keystone State Construction Company, which is sinking the caisson, and the Holbrook, Cabot & Rollins Company, which is handling the compressed-air work, have installed a hospital lock on the second floor of the building. It accommodates six men.

Maybe It's "Bends" Not Booze
Each one of the "sand-hogs" will be given a badge three and one-quarter inches in diameter, which he will be required to wear in a conspicuous place.

The reason is that men who are afflicted with "bends" at the base of the brain suffer blind staggers and are often thought intoxicated and are sent to hospitals where there are not facilities to treat them properly.

Superintendent Mills has informed police lieutenants in every station house to have patrolmen send any man who appears to be intoxicated and wears a compressed-air worker's badge back to the emergency air lock.

"Dan" McKenzie, dean of all "lock men," explained how the men get their air when one of the pipe lines breaks. "Every lock," McKenzie said, "has at least three or four air lines. By equalizing the pressure on each we take up what is known as "profit and loss." If one of the air lines becomes faulty, a valve closes and our air compressors race. In the fraction of a second air is being sent through one of the other pipes."

The great caisson has been sunk six feet since the actual work of filling it with concrete began Tuesday.

Officials of the Keystone Company announced that more progress was being made in the sinking than was expected.
